

Metro Indianapolis Coalition for Construction Safety, Inc. (MICCS)

The Metro Indianapolis Coalition for Construction Safety, Inc. (MICCS) is a nonprofit organization dedicated to achieving zero injuries on construction job sites.

Through organizing, educating and communicating with its membership, MICCS is a central repository for OSHA certifications, company safety records and regulatory and compliance information. Members include construction companies, users of their services, design professionals and construction-affiliated organizations and companies.

MICCS offers a wide variety of Web-based services to the industry, including membership meetings, seminars and safety awards. MICCS members agree to establish general industry practices as they relate to safety. MICCS is committed to construction safety standards and provides online certification and training.

Web-based Certification Program

Working in conjunction with MICCS staff, Guilford Group developed a web-based system that contains detailed information about participating contractors' safety program and records. It allows the membership base to evaluate each other in order to determine if safety prequalification requirements are met. The system also provides automatic notification for renewal, a review process, and grading in addition to updating the status of its members.

Guilford Group was able to collaborate with MICCS to create a comprehensive construction safety monitoring and qualification system that matches the high level of quality and commitment to standards that MICCS promotes. In accordance with the typical construction goals of "on time and under budget" Guilford Group staff delivered a system that completely requirements of the agency it was designed to support.

"I really get the feeling, and it is supported by action, that Guilford Group really cares and understand our particular needs. Too many times, tech. firms say, "no problem" until they are hired...then there IS a problem."
